IMPORT CHINESE WOMEN SLAVES

By Boston American Lensed Wire.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 8.—The existence of a ring among wealthy Chinese mer chants on the Pacific coast for the pur pose of importing poor men and women of their race, who are kept in virtual slavery for years, is alleged in a petition from the W. C. T. U. of California, re ceived at the State Department.

The petition asks the assistance of the department in ridding San Francisco of 1,500 Chinese women who are living en forced lives of shame. The petition has been turned over to the Bureau of Immi gration.

Officers of the Bureau of Immigration admit that the investigation of conditions surrounding recent arrivals of Chinese at San Francisco gives color to the charge.

The coolies or female slaves, as the case may be, appear to enter into this bondage willingly for the sake of getting into the United States. Once here they discover that the slaveholders takes all their wages.
They dare not rebel for fear of their lives and the lives of their relatives in China.

PALACE TRAINS FOR BUSY MEN

Two of the most luxurious trains in the world were added to the service of the New York, New Haven & Hartford railroad, between Boston and New York, to-day.
The Merchants' Limited, which has been doing a heavy business for the past six months, now runs six specially built cars on each of the two trains, the cars being the finest ever turned out of the Pullman shops.

Starting from New York and Boston at 5 o'clock in the evening, they make the run in just five hours along the Shore Line, which traverses Massachusetts, Rhode Isl and, Connecticut and New York. The trains, composed of a combination baggage and buffet car, a dining car, three parlor cars and an observation car, all equipped with the most elaborate furnishings, afford a trip between the two cities in the highest perfection of railroad luxury.

DRANK LAUDANUM FOR WHISKEY; WAS SOON DEAD

As a result of taking a spoonful of laudanum in place of whiskey, Peter C.
Putnam, eighty-four years old, of No. 30
Baldwin street, Cambridge, died at the Cambridge Hospital to-day.

Putnam, who lives with his daughter Adelaide, has been suffering from a severe cold for the past week and went to the medicine closet to get a little whiskey.
His eyesight was very bad, and by mistake
he poured out a spoonful of laudanum into the tumbler, mixed it with a little sugar and water and drank it.

SR THOMAS WILL NOT QUIT TILL HE LANDS THE BIG CUP

Sir Thomas Lipton, the president of the New York Yacht Club, has been awarded the Colts by the National Commission. This makes four men proposed by draft. They are Ray Clark, of Bridgeport, Conn.; of Milwaukee; Malone, of Massachusetts, and last of all Clements.

BOXING MAY BE STOPPED IN 'FISCO

San Francisco, Sept. 8.—The Board of Supervisors has determined to put an end to the boxing contests that have made this city a Mecca for the sporting men of the entire country. This action was decided on in view of the fact that the city is a Mecca for the sporting men of the entire country.

HOW THREE COULD DOWN CHAMP JEFF

BY TAD.
Could Jeff beat three men in one evening? That's the question which has the sportsmen asking just now. A great many think that if the big fellow were to fight Sharkey, Corbett and Fitz in rounds each on the same evening, that the task would be too much for him. They are just asking the question, and they would get away with the job and admit that he would be a favorite in his betting at the time.

CORNBELL TO HAVE VETERAN PLAYERS

NEW YORK, Sept. 8.—Manager McGraw has engaged Harry Tuttil, manager and trainer of "Young Corbett," to train the Giants the remainder of the season. Tuttil will report for duty at the Polo grounds this morning. The arrangement was entered into last night.

JACK O'BRIEN IS AFTER BIG GAME

NEW YORK, Sept. 8.—Having been obliged to call off his battle with Jim Corbett, Jack O'Brien is now looking around for some other good horse to meet in a six-round bout at Philadelphia. O'Brien has not yet decided on the exact date of the fight, but he is expected to fight in the near future.

RACES BARRED GARDNER WILL MEET CLYNN

CHICAGO, Sept. 8.—The Wakenfield Road race will be held September 13, 14, 15 and 16. The fair is one of the oldest, best managed and most entertaining in the state, and is close to the city, being only twelve miles distant. The races will be held on the Wakenfield Road.

WILL PLAY DECIDING GAME

Next Saturday at the Carter street grounds, Chelsea, the Clements and the Highland A. will cross bats in the third and deciding game for the championship of Chelsea. Edwards will try to shut out the Clements, and Edwards and Courtney will be in the game for the Highland A.

HUGO REEVE'S AMBITIOUS

CHICAGO, Sept. 8.—Hugo Reeve, the Western middleweight champion, who has spent three months resting up during the hot weather at Grass Lake, Ill., is in good shape to box his next fight. He will fight on September 13, 14, 15 and 16.

YALE GIANTS WILL BE IN THE AGAIN

Special to the Boston American.
NEW HAVEN, Sept. 8.—There is no doubt in the minds of Yale students that the football team will be strongly represented on the team from this fall. From the large number of veteran players who are to return, and the character of the coaches chosen for the coming campaign, a most successful season should result.

BEVERLY SIGNS HAFFORD

His Hartford, the great Norwich High pitcher, will play with Beverly the rest of the season. Hafford has been playing the season as one of the best pitchers.

DAINTY EARLY FALL COATS DESIGNED BY MRS. OSBORN FOR WOMAN'S PAGE READERS

STUNNING FALL COAT

COAT FOR THIN MATERIAL

probability is that really earnest workers who meant to make a mark by their work would settle to have none. For my part, I feel that if a woman's life is to be monopolized by giving children to the country, the State ought to engage her to do so, and pay for the service as it does in other callings that benefit the nation."

Here I remained silent. For years I have been trying to maintain that wider education for women, that broader opportunities and equal responsibilities for both sexes need more for the moment destroy that ideal of family life which is the best heritage of any nation.

the great educating force which should be ready to adapt its teachings to new developments, social and moral. Parents must understand that their relations to their children demand a far greater knowledge of the needs of both boys and girls, when they have reached years of discretion, but in which they are still so dependent on the exercise of their gifts and powers, let

What He Said

We ought to do our neighbor all the good we can. If you do good, good will be done to you; but if you do evil, the same will be measured back to you again.

Who He Was

Pilpay said many more things than we have quoted here. Who he was, however, is not known. He is supposed to have been a Brahmin "gymnosophist"—a naked philosopher—who lived several centuries before Christ and his real name is thought to have been Bidpai.

Wise men say that there are three sorts of persons who are wholly deprived of judgment—they who are ambitious of preferments in the courts of princes; they who make use of poison to show their skill in curling it; and they who intrust women with their secrets.

For perhaps a thousand years the proverbs of this wise man were passed about by word of mouth, or noted only in Sanskrit. In the sixth century a Persian physician translated them into Pehlvi; two hundred years later they were done in Arabic, and then they were carried into Europe. Itabbi Joel later translated the sayings into Hebrew; and John of Capua turned them into Latin from the rabbi's version. Three hundred years ago they were done into English.

Whoever prefers the service of princes before his duty to his Creator will be sure, early or late, to repent in vain.

The old English proverb writers used Pilpay's proverbs very largely—in fact, if it was not for the old Brahmin there would be many fewer English proverbs than there are. The proverbs have been translated into every European language and into many Asiatic tongues—Persian, Malay, Mongolian, Afghan: they are the proverbs of the world.

FOR SLIGHT PEOPLE

THE tight-fitting three-quarter-length coat is assured of a large share of Dame Fashion's favor for the Autumn and Winter months. The matter for congratulation to the fortunate possessor of a good figure.

The Louis XV. coat, to be suggested by the name, must be of satin richly embroidered, or of velvet, and in either case have and jeweled buttons adorn it. The long tail, the wide collar, the cuffs, the waistband, lapels, pocket flaps and cuffs, jabots and sleeve ruffs, when worn by a woman a full figure to the waist, a skirt a fringe to the knee, and a wide collar, a full ruffle, a high silk stole or "sassy" mantle, is the acme of good taste.

A word, too, concerning the coats of the men. The double-breasted, if you want something essentially up-to-date you should purchase one of these, which are to be had in four or five colors. The straight-fronted, with a fitting back

A third is tight fitting behind and double breasted in front, with leather collar and cuffs, and a belt laced in front.

A fourth is fitted under the front; and a couple is pleated and striped, with a wide collar and cuffs, and decorated with motifs of black velvet, edged with a narrow black ribbon.

"No," cried Harold, "there must be more of this abominable secrecy. Let us be straightforward and have everything out. It has only come a little earlier than you intended, dear." He turned lovingly to Esther and passed his arm about her. "Is it I who am going to ask a few questions and straighten this tangled skein. You will speak freely and openly?" He looked down into the eyes of the pale girl at his side and read truth and devotion in them.

"I will hold nothing back—nothing," she murmured.

"It is a no-show," interpreted the rectory.

safe—yet you ask me to keep silence?"
She spoke with intensity of feeling.
"I am glad to hear of this," cried the rectory
for the first time showing emotion. "I do not know of this nor do I understand that there should be a motive for hurting you."
"I am glad to hear of this," cried the rectory
and, indeed I do."
"Do I not know all that has happened to me during the last year?" cried Ester suddenly, "all I have undergone since that time, the loss of my home, a mock marriage which you conducted?"
"A mock marriage?" Harold turned and "I cannot answer you, Mr. Borradale." "It is true," Mr. Borradale said. "It is true," continued Esther, excitedly, "and I will tell you all about it when I tell you my story fully. This man"—she indicated the rector, who stood lifting his thin lips in evident vexation—"was the priest who afflicted. The other day he despised him- self to me. I went to him in my trouble and asked if I was bound to the man to whom he had married me. He professes ignorant ignorance of the circumstances. He says he never married me."

"Adderley?" It was Mrs. Borradale who repeated the word, with surprised emphasis. "Yes, Adderley. It was there that this black smoke marriage took place at midnight

"Harold," she murmured, "this is worse than I expected. It affects me—so—so nearly that I can tell you. It weakens these memories, thoughts that I have striven for years and years to drive away. It is tearing at a wound which has never healed. She pressed her hands to her heart. "Oh, my dear, dear son, your inheritance is a hard one indeed!"

Either, too, advanced timorously. "I don't hurt you," she murmured, tears which she had bravely withheld before springing to her eyes now.

"It is no fault of yours, Esther," she said, "it is the freebie reply. 'You, dear, are involuntarily involved in our common misfortunes. It is hard upon you, and it will fall heaviest of all upon my son Harold. Oh, my children!'—and his voice rose to a pitiful moan—"I have been in a dream, a childish, happy dream, and it is disappointed just as all my dreams have been. I have tried to lift the curtain from you, Harold; I have struggled, oh, how hard, and I have done foolish things—things which I regret, but I have tried to give you your father's fate. But destiny is stronger than I. It has all been useless, of no avail—the irony of it—the irony!" She broke off.

The poor student helpless and at evidence of indecision. At last, seizing his opportunity, he spoke to the young man.

"I beg pardon,"

"Mr. Probyn," said Harold, glancing at his dislike for the clergyman evident in his eyes, "it must be clear to you that I am not a member of the church, and that what is still a mystery to me. I don't know yet to what extent you are concerned in it. It is my mother and father who are members, and I have no doubt that in some way or other you have been concerned in the trouble. I have noticed your name in connection with marked emphasis,"—has endured," he has also shown that you have had deliberately spoken untrue to me. I have seen you in the street, and I do not know, so I propose to investigate the whole matter. Till then I will not judge. At present I will leave you to your own affairs."

The rector took his hat, and he fumbled with it nervously. He had passed a life of hypocrisy, and he had never been disabused. His face seemed absolutely bloodless.
